

BUFFET

About the names

The names of all the suggested beverages correspond to the XVIII-XIX centuries. The main part of the name is the type of the drink: erofeich, ratafia, vodka, nalivka (fruit liqueur). As for the second part, which is mostly an adjective that reflect the character of the drink: aniseed erofeich, rowan ratafia, bersenevaya nalivka (gooseberry liqueur), milk filtered lemon vodka.

EROFEICHES

Erofeich is the Tzar of a Russian buffet. These beverages, being born in the XVII century, existed until the last quarter of the XIX century. They had always been the most expensive drinks that were available only for noble and merchant societies.

The suggested erofeiches are classically prepared and represent quarter distillation drinks that have an approximate alcoholic content of 56 % by volume. It is served exclusively from the ice in small and chilled wine glasses of 30-40 ml.

Erofeich is swallowed at one gulp without having anything with it at first, one should wait for a particular warming feeling in his stomach.

CARAWAY EROFEICH (ТМИННЫЙ)

Classic Russian alcoholic drink of quarter distillation based on flowers and young sprouts of St. John`s wort, collected near the Mana River (Eastern Sayan Mountains). In the XVII century, alongside with wild orange and lemon vodkas, zveroboynaya vodka was the most popular alcoholic drink on a Russian table. Due to St. John`s wort it contains a complex of natural substances, giving a strong anti-depressive effect. It is an ideal beverage for a meal that perfectly develops with plates prepared from beef, veal and fowl. It has a specific floral-and-herbal aroma and a herbal-and-pepper taste. Served slightly chilled.

NALIVKY AND ZAPEKANKY

They represent vodka prepared from different berries, fruit and herbs. Here are some peculiarities of the production: 1) Only whole berries are used, which are not cut, undamaged, with intact peel; 2) During the preparation, depending on the temperature, one has to take the time into account. For instance, strawberries have to be drawn at a temperature of 25°C during 20 hours, otherwise the liqueur won't be fragrant.

Every object of the drawing requires its own time. 3) The liquid is poured out without damaging the fruit and berries. Wringing is not used during the nalivka production.

4) The derived infusion is fixed with a thermal processing, clarified by sedimentation and poured into bottles without filtration.

There is a particular peculiarity of classic Russian nalivkas (they are also called «Russian liqueur»), they can develop their taste being in bottle, cultivating it within the time.

The alcoholic content of nalivkas differs from 14 to 25% by volume. They are a wonderful dessert both alone and as an accompaniment for any dessert plate.

BLUEBERRY NALIVKA (черничная)

Nalivka based on an alcoholic drink of double distillation. It is prepared from blueberries, picked up near the Eastern Sayan Mountains. A wonderful independent dessert and an accompaniment for dessert plates, based on cream.
